

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

Someone asked me a question about the stock market. May a Christian speculate in the stock market or in Internet stocks?

- A) A Christian can not speculate in the stock market.
- B) The Church doesn't have any guidelines about it. Pope Francis opened a discussion about it a month ago.
- C) A Christian can speculate in the stock market or in Internet stocks as long as he does so within the parameters of normal business practices for prudently investing one's own or someone else's money and does not thereby break any other commandments. *Speculating in stocks becomes immoral when dishonest means are used (for instance, insider information); when the transaction puts one's own or another's life savings at risk instead of insuring an income; when such speculation becomes an addiction, as with game of chance.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

I would like to ask this question: How should we treat property that belongs to everyone?

- A) Vandalism and deliberately damaging public facilities and common property are forms of theft, and restrictions must be made.
- B) The Church doesn't talk about it.
- C) The property that belongs to everyone is the second class category of the property. We don't have to take care of it.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

I would like to ask this question: How should we treat property that belongs to everyone?

- A) Vandalism and deliberately damaging public facilities and common property are forms of theft, and restrictions must be made.
- B) The Church doesn't talk about it.
- C) The property that belongs to everyone is the second class category of the property. We don't have to take care of it.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

Someone asked me a question about the stock market. May a Christian speculate in the stock market or in Internet stocks?

- A) A Christian can not speculate in the stock market.
- B) The Church doesn't have any guidelines about it. Pope Francis opened a discussion about it a month ago.
- C) A Christian can speculate in the stock market or in Internet stocks as long as he does so within the parameters of normal business practices for prudently investing one's own or someone else's money and does not thereby break any other commandments. *Speculating in stocks becomes immoral when dishonest means are used (for instance, insider information); when the transaction puts one's own or another's life savings at risk instead of insuring an income; when such speculation becomes an addiction, as with game of chance.