

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

This topic came up and what will it be the answer for this question: What does the Church's social doctrine say about the topics of labour and unemployment?

A) To work is a duty that God has given to us. In a common effort we are supposed to look after and continue his work of creation. "The Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to till it and keep it" (Gen 2:15). For most people, work is the foundation of life. Unemployment is a serious misfortune that must be dealt with resolutely.

Today many people who would like to work find no jobs, there are also "workaholics" who work so much that they have no time left for God and their fellowmen. While many people can scarcely feed themselves and their families with their wages, others earn so much that they can live a life of unimaginable luxury. Work is not an end in itself but should serve the development of a humane society. That is why CATHOLIC SOCIAL TEACHING is committed to an economic order in which all men can collaborate actively and share in the prosperity that is achieved. It insists on a just wage that enables all to have a dignified existence, and it calls on the rich to practice the virtues of moderation, solidarity, and sharing.

B) The church doesn't talk about this topic.

C) The most important is salvation. We do not have a duty to work.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

I have a very philosophical question: What is meant by the principle "labour before capital"?

A) The Church feels that she should not talk about this topic. The only important topic for the Church is Jesus Christ. Relationship between work and capital doesn't interest the Church.

B) The Church has always taught "the principle of the priority of labor over capital" (Pope Saint John Paul II, LE). Man owns money or capital as a thing. Labor in contrast, is inseparable from the person who performs it. That is why the basic needs of laborers have priority over the interests of capital.

C) The Church says capital is the most important thing.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

I have a very philosophical question: What is meant by the principle "labour before capital"?

- A) The Church feels that she should not talk about this topic. The only important topic for the Church is Jesus Christ. Relationship between work and capital doesn't interest the Church.
- B) The Church has always taught "the principle of the priority of labor over capital" (Pope Saint John Paul II, LE). Man owns money or capital as a thing. Labor in contrast, is inseparable from the person who performs it. That is why the basic needs of laborers have priority over the interests of capital.
- C) The Church says capital is the most important thing.

How well do you know the Catholic faith? Well, let's find out..."

This topic came up and what will it be the answer for this question: What does the Church's social doctrine say about the topics of labour and unemployment?

- A) To work is a duty that God has given to us. In a common effort we are supposed to look after and continue his work of creation. "The Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to till it and keep it" (Gen 2:15). For most people, work is the foundation of life. Unemployment is a serious misfortune that must be dealt with resolutely.

Today many people who would like to work find no jobs, there are also "workaholics" who work so much that they have no time left for God and their fellowmen. While many people can scarcely feed themselves and their families with their wages, others earn so much that they can live a life of unimaginable luxury. Work is not an end in itself but should serve the development of a humane society. That is why CATHOLIC SOCIAL TEACHING is committed to an economic order in which all men can collaborate actively and share in the prosperity that is achieved. It insists on a just wage that enables all to have a dignified existence, and it calls on the rich to practice the virtues of moderation, solidarity, and sharing.

- B) The church doesn't talk about this topic.
- C) The most important is salvation. We do not have a duty to work.